Manuscript title: Environmental theology and its relevance to Islamic jurisprudence: insights from Makassar muslim scholars, Indonesia

Abstract:

This article discusses the insights of Makassar Muslim scholars regarding environmental theology concerning Islamic Jurisprudence. It employs qualitative research methodology through observation, interview, and document collection. The research found that Makassar Muslim scholars strongly perceived environmental theology as an alternative solution to ecological crises. They believe that two primary sources of Islam, the Quran, and Hadith, pay great attention to protecting and maintaining an environment. Many verses in the Quran promote the importance of keeping the environment. Prophet Muhammad is the best practice among leaders strongly concerned about the environment. It also found that environmental theology has a strong relationship with Islamic Jurisprudence.

Contribution: This research contributes to strengthening environmental theology as a basis for developing insights and Islamic jurisprudence that focuses on human concern for nature and the environment, and focuses on practical explanations on how to protect the environment.
