Dear Dr. Baidhawy,

I hope you're well and have had a chance to read my previous email which I sent on December 28.

I'm reaching out because you may be interested in reviewing the following Qeios article (December 1, 2023). Your colleague, Dr. Azaki Khoirudin, is also among the potential reviewers.

We suggest a 4-week soft deadline for the review, but don't worry if you need more time.

This invitation is personal, so please avoid sharing it.

As you may know, Qeios is an open-access, open peer review, academic publishing platform. Publishing is free, and it has no editors who make accept/reject decisions.

Instead, the validity of the papers is determined solely by the reviewers, who communicate publicly with the authors after publication. We believe that this post-publication peer review system, which allows all relevant peers to participate, is more effective in highlighting robust research and controlling the dissemination of flawed works. Good research is praised as it deserves, while flawed research is given a low rating, preventing misinformation from spreading between journals after a few reviews behind the scenes.

Most importantly, since Qeios does not have editors who make accept/reject decisions, the peer feedback provided is exclusively meant to offer authors suggestions for improving their papers and informing readers about the validity of the works.

Furthermore, peer reviews on Qeios:

are posted alongside the articles and get citable DOIs, boosting reviewers' visibility among other things; are made available under a CC BY 4.0 license, meaning that you retain the copyright on your hard work;

are indexed in Google Scholar, and you can add them to your Publons / Web of Science and ORCID profiles.

Accept / Decline

When reviewing on Qeios, please be constructive, thorough, and kind.

Thank you and best regards,

Alberto Bedogni
